

Collectors Gather at Frankfurt's Insect Fair

One of the strangest fairs in the world is held at the German town of Frankfurt every year. Nottingham, England, has its goose fair, and in other cities there are mop fairs and fur fairs. But Frankfurt goes one better than any of these by holding an insect fair.

Collectors come from all parts of the world to meet sellers of rare butterflies and moths. Some of these are worth amazing sums. There are men, too, offering and disposing of beetles, flies, grasshoppers, crickets, and so on. Most of the vendors bring their stock with them and display the beauties of their specimens to inquirers. There are many, however, who do business in quite a different way.

They have no stock with them; they sell insects, so to speak, on the hoof, just as cattle men will sell beasts that are a thousand miles away on the ranges. These sellers of queer insects specialize in knowing just where the rarest kinds are to be found. Along comes a collector who asks if a particular specimen can be obtained for him. Though the one which will eventually grace his cabinet is not yet born, the order is booked and in due course the specimen is delivered.

Louis Kossuth Showed Eloquence in English

America's deep-rooted tradition, as an asylum for the oppressed of other lands, a tradition which in some instances has been permitted to lapse in recent years, found vivid expression on the visit of Louis Kossuth to this country after the collapse of the Hungarian revolution of 1848 and 1849, says an article in a Boston paper.

Kossuth was an orator of stirring eloquence even in the English tongue, which he had mastered by reading Shakespeare and the Bible in an Australian prison cell.

"Do me the justice to believe that I do not with any pretension to eloquence, within the Grange of American Liberty. If I were standing upon the ruins of Prytaneeum and had to speak whence Demosthenes spoke, my tongue would refuse to obey, my words would die away from my lips, and I would listen to the winds, fraught with the dreadful realization of his unheeded prophecies."—Detroit News.

Opened Indies to Trade

In 1599 the Dutch raised the price of pepper from 3 shillings to 6 shillings per pound, and in September of that year the merchants of London banded together for the purpose of joining a company to direct trade to the Indies. The East India company was granted a charter by Queen Elizabeth in 1600, and was first called "Governor and Company of Merchants of London Trading with the East Indies." In 1609 William III incorporated the "English" Company Trading With the East Indies. The two were amalgamated in 1708 under the title "The United Company of Merchants of England Trading to the East Indies," commonly called "Honorable East India Company."

Smart

A Santa Monica woman has at last become the champion of her sex. She had been subpoenaed as a witness and the court, before she began her testimony, instructed her as follows:

"You must be very careful, madam, to state only what you actually saw and know. There must be no hearsay evidence." He then signaled for the prosecutor to go ahead.

"What is your age?" asked that worthy.

"I cannot answer," cooed the lady. "I have only hearsay knowledge on that point."—Los Angeles Times.

Russian Universities

The universities of Russia before the World war were divided into two classifications—the universities of arts and sciences and the institutions which included the schools of mines, technological institutions and the like. Students in the universities of arts and sciences wore uniforms of dark blue material, trimmed with light blue. Students in the other institutions wore uniforms of black or dark blue and wore special insignia of the particular institution which they attended, on the shoulders of the uniform.

Firefly's Light

Lightning bugs or fireflies belong to any species of two genera of beetles of the family Lampyridae. Photuris pennsylvanica is a common form in the eastern United States. Fireflies produce a bright, soft, intermittent light without sensible heat from an organ in the lower part of the abdomen. This organ appears to be a specialized part of the fat body and is supplied with nerves and abundant trachea. The light is supposed by some to be caused by oxidation of a substance secreted by the cells.

Difference

Sunny, driving through the country with his grandmother, observed some pigs eating greedily in a field of clover, and inquired what they were doing. "They are eating clover," his grandmother informed the little fellow. "They like it just like you like spinach." Sunny was instant in his disclaimer: "But I don't like spinach at all," said he.

TIP TWICE REFUSED OUSTS CUSTOMS MANBill Slipped Into Pocket by Arriving Passenger.

New York.—Because a $5 tip which he had twice refused was slipped into his pocket by an arriving passenger, Theodore Kessler, a customs inspector for 20 years, was dismissed from the service.

Kessler, who was popularly known on the New York docks as Teddy, is the first victim in a war declared recently by customs heads at Washington against graft.

Two other inspectors have been charged with bribes in connection with the smuggling of narcotics, but their case is still pending.

Three weeks ago Kessler was assigned to inspect baggage from the North German Lloyd liner Europa at the army base, Brooklyn. One of the passengers whose baggage he inspected was a Chicago man, who twice offered Kessler $5 as a gratuity, which he declined.

The passenger good-naturedly slipped the tip into Kessler's pocket. The act was seen by A. J. May, an undercover agent of the Treasury department.

May searched Kessler and found the $5. He instantly ordered a re-inspection of the baggage. Nothing dutiable which had not been declared was found. The passenger admitted giving Kessler the tip.

A disciplinary board found the inspector guilty and recommended he be suspended 60 days. A commissioner of customs at Washington said that the verdict would not be accepted. Kessler was thereupon dismissed.

The speed of his dismissal, which usually takes from three to six months, shocked the customs service. Kessler entered the department in July, 1907, and was appointed an inspector three years later. He resides at 2921 Tilden avenue, Brooklyn.

New York Schools Cost Almost Million a Day

New York.—The daily cost to this city of educating the more than 1,200,000 pupils registered in the various divisions of the public educational system is now more than $300,000. Figures computed on the basis of the annual statistical report of the board of education show that, at the present rate of increase in annual budgets, the cost of the school system for each of the 100 days of the academic year will rise to $1,000,000 in a few years.

The school system total expenditures during 1929 reached a record figure of more than $171,000,000. Excepting a possible increase in the capital outlays during 1930, it is estimated that the educational expense will rise by more than $6,000,000 this year.

The cost of instruction proper was $59,491 for each school day during 1929, and this year it is estimated to reach more than $616,000. The daily expenditures of the system include, in addition to salaries of supervising and teaching forces, the average daily cost of supplies, physical maintenance of the school plant, its operation, the administration, business and general outlays, repairs and the per diem average disbursements for the construction of new buildings to provide additional sittings made necessary by increased registration.

Fleet of Planes Attack Clouds, Break Up Storm

The Hague.—Sunshine or rain at will, in any desired quantities, were promised by the Dutch "rainmaker," Herr Vermaat, today after he led an attack by a fleet of airplanes on a bank of clouds over the North sea. The clouds were broken up and wiped from the skies. Herr Vermaat, with the co-operation of the Dutch war ministry, led five Fokker planes against the clouds about 12,000 feet up. The planes attacked the clouds with ice dust. After about 7,000 pounds of the ice dust had been strewn over the clouds they disappeared. Herr Vermaat plans to make experiments on a larger scale soon.

Gobbler Wants to Set on Eggs; Is Given Chance

Sharptown, Md.—A large turkey gobbler belonging to Mrs. Mark Cooper, near town, showed a great desire to set on eggs and each day would run a turkey hen from her nest in the barnyard and take her place.

Finally Mrs. Cooper made a nest, placed some turkey eggs in it and put the gobbler on them. For four weeks he sat there patiently and at the end of that time was proud to find twelve baby turkeys. Two have disappeared, but the remaining ten follow the peculiar call of this proud gobbler and are growing fast.

Snap Shot Hits Gator; Ends Duck Mystery

Chilaca, N. Y.—The mystery of what has caused the continued disappearance recently of ducks in a lake on the Irving Bergen country place in New Hackensack, near here, was solved when an employee shot at an object he saw skimming over the water and found he had stunned a four-foot alligator.

Investigation showed the alligator had been brought from Florida, had escaped from a farm in the vicinity to a brook and from there reached the lake and began slaughtering the ducks. The alligator was captured.

That Six-Hour Layoff

Not in the Contract
The man who operates a dairy has a steady job, and those who work in feeding, milking, distributing and keeping the barn in condition can't loaf on the job or failure is sure," said Bob Bell, "as is illustrated by the dairyman who was noted for the high quality of his cattle and seeing to it that his hired help were kept busy. A negro came to him for work, and after looking him over, was told he didn't look like he wanted a steady job. 'Yasuh, boss, Ah wants a steady job.' He was put to work. His 'steady job' was to milk 20 cows, care for the milk, wash the utensils, carry the cows and feed them, and drive them to and from the pasture. It took him eighteen hours to perform his duties, but he was game and stayed for a couple of months. Then he gave notice that he was going to quit. 'I know! I know!' he called the dairyman. 'Yasuh, boss, Ah does,' protested the dairyman, 'but you ain't been givin' me no steady job; you's been layin' me off six hours every night.'—Exchange.

More Than One Method

of Arriving at Truth
Can you tell another person a telling lie?
There are people who claim to be able to detect a liar at once, and a machine has been invented which, by measuring a man's blood pressure, gives a fairly clear indication as to whether he is telling the truth or not. A non-mechanical test for liars has been in use in the East for many years. If a crime has been committed in a village, the villagers are drawn up in a line, bareheaded, and questioned. The questioner doesn't pay much attention to faces—he glances at the toes of each individual. If they are "clawing down" into the ground, their owner knows more about the affair than he cares to admit.
This test, of course, only works where the natives don't know the signs for which the questioner is looking. And changes in blood pressure aren't necessarily a proof of guilt. They denote fear or anxiety, which may be felt by the innocent as well as by the guilty.—London Answers.

Fire in History

Benjamin Franklin deserves to be called the father of American comfort. The rocking chair is attributed to him, and his was probably the first attempt ever made to construct a hot-air furnace. Certainly New England had no household furnaces before 1835, and even the first successful baseburner is dated about 1837. Primitive man dug hearths in his cave; lodging, classical dwellings found braziers adequate, the Middle Ages built fireplaces of a necessary enormity for their spacious halls and it was only a little while ago, as time flew, that anyone enjoyed the modern luxury of a stove such as within one century has become an "American antique."

It Sounded About Right

A story Conan Doyle used to love to tell, for it was against himself—he was that kind of a man—had to do with a lecture he was about to deliver on one of his tours over here. At the last minute the man who was to have introduced him was unable to be present, and another local worthy was hurriedly pressed into service. He did right nobly until the critical moment arrived. Then he faltered, pulled himself together, and proceeded:
"And now, ladies and gentlemen, let me give you a pleasure and privilege to introduce to you Conan Doyle, the eminent divine."—Kansas City Star.

Two-Dollar Bill Called

"Just Darned Nuisance"
The idea that there is something unlucky about the $2 bill—so that many persons fear the corners of them to avert misfortune—occasionally arouses curiosity.
A number of our readers have written in with suggestions to account for the belief in the unluckiness of this particular note. One, however, a merchant in Pennsylvania, says from his experience as a retailer that "there is no question of superstition in connection with the $2 bill, it is just a darned nuisance."
"There is no compartment provided in our cash register for them," he writes, "and when we are handed one by a customer we have to scrounge it away somewhere until we get a chance to pass it on to the bank. We can't very well hand it out to another customer for change, that is if we want to retain their good will."
"The only possible use it has is when some one purchases a 2-cent stamp and hands us a $2 bill in payment. Then we can get back at him by unloading all the $2 bills we have on hand."—Literary Digest.

The Mannekin

A few minutes away from the Grand place of Brussels—"noblesse of medieval squares"—at the corner of the Rue du Commerce and the Rue du Chêne, stands the famous Mannekin fountain. This impudent rascal is a popular hero, everywhere known as the "oldest citizen of Brussels." Whenever visiting celebrities wish to please the Brusselsers, they present the Mannekin with a new suit of clothes. He has costumes of many nations—from a Napoleonic uniform to a gayly embroidered Japanese kimono—all of which are kept by the city for him to wear on special occasions. But whether naked as he was made, or decked out in an admiral's gold braid, he continues to fulfill his role of being the merriest fountain in Europe.

Holding a Husband

How to keep a husband, in nine chapters, is told by the California Federation of Women's Clubs. Here are the rules: Dress prettily for breakfast. Get your husband to take you out two evenings a week, but let him stay at home the rest. Pay the household bills before buying new dresses. Never permit your husband to visit on holidays. Listen to your husband if he likes the sound of his voice. Ask his advice on everything. No clinging, but not too clinging. Make him think you're a weak, small creature and he is 6 feet tall with the strength of a lion.

Free for All

It was Freddie's first visit to the country.
During a walk with his grandfather in the woods he kept looking round as if expecting to see some one.
"Why are you looking round?" asked the old gentleman.
"Where's the policeman?" asked Freddie.
"Policeman?" cried the other. "We have no policeman in the country."
"The boy looked more puzzled than before."
"Then who keeps the people off the grass?" he answered.

Dads Can Have Other Uses

"So you insist on four windows in your den," asked the architect of the man for whom he was planning a home.
"Yes, it must have four windows," the man replied. "You see my wife takes a lot of light for her sewing."—Copper's Weekly.

Helping Local Merchants Advertise

Every merchant who mentions above his signature in his advertisement in this paper that he carries a line of merchandise that is nationally advertised in the magazines and journals, gets the advantage of whatever good will the national advertising has created.

Confidence has been built up in the reader's mind in the advertising in the national journals and the announcement by the merchant that he carries this particular line, marks him in the mind of the average buyer, as a discriminating merchant.

Test your own reaction. This must be good, it is well advertised. Are you cashing in, Mr. Merchant, on the wealth of national advertising of today?

Reds Shout, but There Is Nothing Much Doing

View of the Communists gathered in Union square, New York city, to celebrate the third anniversary of the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. The "electric chair" shown in the center of the crowd was expected to arouse their ire, but they merely yawned, while squads of mounted and foot police stood by. Communist speakers shouted "down with everything," but nothing happened.

Old War Monitor Reduced to Lowly Service

Not long ago, at a shipyard in New Orleans, a float ferryboat belonging to the Texas-Pacific Mailboat Company was hauled up for repairs. Registered as the Gouldsbere, she had been knocking around without having been in dry dock since 1916; and nobody knew what her earlier history might have been.

The "Gouldsbere" Up for Repair
On examination, her hull was found to be of wrought iron, a material which went out of use for ships' plates a good half century ago, but which is known to have greater resistance to corrosion, especially in sea water, than materials now in favor.

Under the accumulation of paint and scale, identifying marks were discovered. "Chickasaw!" It was not until now that the story of the Chickasaw, built in 1862, one of Admiral Farragut's monitors in the battle of Mobile Bay in 1864. A war relic reduced to lowly service!

The first annual local contest of the 4-H Clubs was held at the school house Wednesday evening, Sept. 24, with the members and interested friends in attendance. The cooking and housekeeping club had whole grain muffins on exhibit. Several of the girls took the sewing project also, and there was a fine display of aprons, towels, pillow slips, night gowns and pajamas. The patching and darning were also present.

"The Boys' club had a fine display of garden vegetables. One crate of chikens was exhibited. All displays were of excellent quality and no one could deny that their first year of club work was a success.
